1. In Fukien the political committee of a special administrative area is a subordinate echelon of the Central Committee of the Chinese Communist Party. The political committee of the Lungch'i (N 24-32, E 117-42) Special Administrative Area is an example. Senior members of the Party who are from the area serve on this committee in addition to carrying out their government functions. Normally the administrative area commissioner acts as chairman, although occasionally a permanent secretary is appointed to this position by the next higher echelon.
2. Five departments are under the direction of the Lungch'i Political Committee. Each department has a chief, assistant chief, and three to five administrative assistants. The five departments are: Organization, Propaganda, Administrative, Secretarial, and Cultural and Educational.
3. Ultimate authority rests with the secretary of the committee and not with the commissioner. Each area committee administers a staff member training school. All executives within the Party machinery, or staff members who have elected to become executives within the Party machinery, are required to go through this school. All members of the special administrative area Party organization wear a circular badge with red characters on a silver background.
4. The hsien political committee controls areas within the special administrative area. The organization of the hsien committee parallels that of the special administrative area, as follows:
 - a. Senior staff members of the Party who are from the same hsien serve on the committee in addition to carrying out their regular government functions.
 - b. The hsien magistrate generally acts as committee chairman; otherwise a secretary is appointed by the special administrative area committee.

- c. Subordinate sections are directed by the committee, and function for the same activities as those under the special administrative area.
- d. Authority rests with the hsien committee secretary.
- e. Although not maintaining a school, the hsien committee holds, from time to time, training classes for those Party members who have elected to become staff members of the hsien Party machinery.
5. In Fukien the ch'u (0575) political committee is a subordinate echelon of the hsien political committee. The organization of this committee is basically the same as that of the hsien and special administrative area committees. The hsiang (6763) political committee is the lowest echelon of Party organization. It administers Party matters for small areas, such as groups of streets or lanes within villages. The organization follows in line with that of superior Party echelons.

The organization of this committee, which is similar to other local NDYC committees, includes administration; organization; propaganda; inspection; and indoctrination and training sections. The last section has the responsibility of organizing local Youth Corps and Pioneer Corps. 25X1

Comments

1. Lungch'i is an old name for Changchou. Presumably the special administrative area and the hsien still use the name Lungch'i.
